The Christian Tradition

Chapter 1

Summary:

Sociologist Peter Berger's claim—that if India is the most religious country and Sweden the least, the United States is a nation of Indians ruled by Swedes—is inaccurate. On the contrary, modern political leaders have consistently used religious rhetoric, and most of the American public exhibits religious illiteracy. According to Christian Smith, many embrace a worldview of moralistic, therapeutic deism regardless of their professed religion. Religious illiteracy occurs because religion is avoided in public education and common discourse as “too hot to handle,” and because contemporary American religious traditions demand very little of their adherents. However, it is crucial for believers, atheists, and agnostics alike to develop a fuller understanding of religion. To understand the foundations of Western culture, the meaning of much art, music, and literature, and our common nature as homo religiosus, one must be well versed in religion. Religion offers an “all-embracing horizon of meaning” to its adherents, and its profound significance for humans in society cannot be ignored. This book examines the history and theological development of Christianity using an insider/outsider approach; both perspectives are necessary for a rich examination of the religious tradition.

As Alfred North Whitehead observed, Christianity is “a religion seeking a metaphysic.” It was formed around the person of Jesus Christ, and later developed theological doctrines. Albert Outler noticed four sources in John Wesley's theology—the Wesleyan Quadrilateral of reason, experience, tradition, and scripture. Christian theology and practice is characterized by the dynamic between these four elements.

The Bible is considered broadly by Christians to be the word of God, and holds a great deal of authority (binding power) for believers. It is a collection of texts compiled in the several centuries after Jesus's death, and certain texts were canonized or rejected based on their representation of the authentic Christian tradition as early bishops recognized it. Determining what domains the Bible holds authority over is wedded to issues of interpretation.

Interpretations of the Bible vary based on differing approaches that scholars come to the text with. The secular approach examines the Bible's relationship to the Christian tradition, but does not discuss whether the Bible says anything true of God. So, it cannot represent Christianity as it sees itself. Another approach to the Bible, as Christian Smith noted, is the biblicist approach, which believes the Bible was essentially dictated by God. It affirms ten claims—found in the chapter—on the Bible's inerrancy, universality, and literal meaning. However, Smith argued that biblicism cannot work because it overlooks the interpretive plurality even among biblicists, and simply ignores the difficulty of contradictory passages. In short, it is philosophically naïve.

A third approach, which steers clear of the shortcomings of the first two, examines the Bible through faithful critical analysis of the text and its relationship to tradition. It understands the Bible as revelation of a saving faith, but recognizes that it is contextualized and limited by the human authors and their place in culture and history. The richest interpretive approaches take the contexts and particularities of the text into account. Form criticism acknowledges the genre of the text at hand while interpreting it, historical-critical method identifies cultural assumptions and nuances in language given the time and place of authorship, redaction criticism examines the history of edits to the text, and so on. These forms of criticism aim to draw as much insight as possible from the Bible, which is inexhaustible and has a surplus of meaning.

Multiple Choice Questions:

1. *According to Steven Prothero, how many American adults can name a Gospel?
 (A) 25%
 (B) 35%
 (C) 50%
 (D) 65%.
Right answer is C
2. Sociologist Christian Smith argued that Americans implicitly embrace a generic faith. What did he call that faith?
 (A) Christianity lite
 (B) Moralistic, therapeutic deism
 (C) American civil religion
 (D) Homo religiosus
Right answer is B
3. *The author argues that understanding religion, particularly Christianity, is crucial for students. Which of the following is not one of the reasons he gives?
 (A) Much of the cultural history of the West would be unintelligible without it
 (B) Humans are religious by nature
 (C) Not knowing about one's religion keeps one from deeply engaging in one's religious community
 (D) The dynamics of religion need to be understood to understand what brings social harmony and what brings social conflict
Right answer is C
4. What comparison did the author use to distinguish religious from nonreligious demands?
 (A) School
 (B) Music
 (C) Sports
 (D) Watching TV
Right answer is C
5. *The author argues that most Americans are religiously illiterate. Which reason was not given by the author to explain this?
 (A) Religion has been virtually eliminated from public schools
 (B) Religion has been virtually eliminated from public discourse
 (C) Religions in contemporary America demand little from their adherents
 (D) Religions in contemporary America are too divided to have a coherent message
Right answer is D
6. How did sociologist Mircea Eliade describe human nature?
 (A) Deus magnus
 (B) Homo dei
 (C) Homo religious
 (D) Perspectus transcendus.
(Right answer is C)
7. *According to the author, how many Christians are there worldwide?
 (A) 1.5 billion
 (B) 2.2 billion
 (C) 3.1 billion
 (D) 3.8 billion
Right answer is B
8. *In just over the last 100 years, Christianity has grown in Africa by how much?

- (A) Doubled
- (B) Tripled
- (C) Grown over ten times as large
- (D) Grown almost 65 times as large

9. The author claims that Christianity is fundamentally a religion about:

- (A) Jesus
- (B) Religion itself
- (C) Religion for religion's sake
- (D) God.

Right answer is A

10. The author discusses biblical authority by parsing the Latin word auctoritas. What does auctoritas literally mean?

- (A) Authority
- (B) Dominance or control
- (C) Origination or source
- (D) Finality or completion

Right answer is C

11. *Which of the following is not part of the Wesleyan Quadrilateral?

- (A) Reason
- (B) Revelation
- (C) Tradition
- (D) Scripture

Right answer is B

12. According to the author, on what basis did the church discern which texts should be part of the New Testament?

- (A) Tradition
- (B) They declared themselves written by apostles
- (C) They were true
- (D) They had authority.

Right answer is A

13. *The author describes a secular scholarship's approach to the Bible as

- (A) The same way they treat other claimed canonical texts
- (B) Not spiritually wise
- (C) Necessarily not inspiring
- (D) Inherently wrong.

Right answer is A

14. *What is a biblicist?

- (A) Someone who believes the Bible is the word of God
- (B) Someone who believes the Bible is not the word of God
- (C) Someone who believes the Bible was written by God
- (D) Someone who thinks the Bible ought to be memorized.

Right answer is C

15. Which of the following best reflects the author's comprehension about being a Biblical Christian?

- (A) It is about exploring, appreciating, and applying biblical themes within the context of one's spiritual life

- (B) It is about seeing the Bible as the sole word of God and directing one's life by its every teaching
- (C) It is about allowing one's soul to be dominated by the biblical word, so that every spiritual thought is biblically inspired and directed
- (D) It is about being a biblical fundamentalist (which the author criticizes).

Right answer is A

True or False Questions:

1. Sociologist Peter Berger argued that the United States is a highly religious country ruled by nonreligious politicians. True
2. *The last five presidents were practicing Christians. True
3. *A real scholar of religion, whether a believer or not, has to work solely as an outsider so as not to be biased. False
4. The author believes that faith claims are, by their very nature, not aligned to reason. False
5. The author believes that most religious scholars are biblicists. False
6. *The author describes various "criticisms" scholars use to interpret the Bible, for example, form criticism. By this he means that scholars criticize the Bible through various literary tools. False
7. There is a high correlation between religious observance and good citizenry. True
8. *Most Christians give the Bible the pride of place as authority. True
9. *One of the problems of modern Christian scholarship is that it reduces the Bible's contents. False
10. The author claims that the greatest problem in Biblicism is that it is philosophically naïve about the nature of God. True

Essay/Discussion Questions:

1. *The author believes that Americans are understudied regarding religion. In addition to the reasons provided, are there other factors in American culture that may have contributed to such a lack of understanding?
2. The author cites sociologist Christian Smith who believes many Americans embrace a type of generic faith, which Smith calls "moralistic, therapeutic deism." This is a worldview of a kind of distant, benign God who demands little and offers little in this life. Do you think this assessment of American religiosity is correct? What do you think of this picture of American religiosity?
3. *The author distinguishes between "insiders" and "outsiders" in scholarship. What are examples in your own life where you are privy to information or experience that is unobtainable from the outside? Are there any experiences in your life where others' experience or commitments may have skewed their objectivity?
4. *What is your view of the Biblicist position? Do you agree with the author's critique? Why or why not?
5. The author's apparent approach to the Bible is through various forms of biblical analysis, such as form criticism, historical critical method, and so on. From the perspective of religious believers, do you think this is an appropriate way to engage the Bible? Why or why not?

Chapter 2

Summary:

This chapter introduces the Old Testament, or Tanakh. The Tanakh represents the canon, or authoritative body of texts, for Jews. Tanakh is a Hebrew acronym for the three parts of the Jewish Scriptures: Torah (law or teaching); Nevi'im (Prophets); and Khetuvim (Writings). Christians refer to it as the “Old Testament,” but this is not to mean that it is overwritten and replaced by the New Testament. Torah is the first five books, sometimes called the “Books of Moses”: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy. The Nevi'im is divided into the Former Prophets, which are historical books, and the Latter Prophets, which are saying of actual prophets. The Khetuvim consists of other miscellaneous texts. The Septuagint, the Greek Tanakh used by first-century Jews outside of Palestine, included some works in the Khetuvim that are not part of today’s Jewish canon. Old Testament canon differs among Catholic, Orthodox, and Protestant Christian traditions.

Evaluating whether the Bible is true is a complicated question. Truth can apply differently depending on what is being looked for in the text. Criticisms that expect the Bible to use modern knowledge and methods are anachronistic. The Bible’s depictions of historical figures and events are frequently laden with historical, theological, and national meaning. We can see this in Genesis 2–11, in which biblical authors drew on an ancient Near East creation-flood story as a template to describe their own story and the relationship between God and man. Differences in New Testament accounts of Jesus’s ascension (Luke 24:50–53 vs. Acts 1:12) are the result of different theological aims. Biblical authors believed that history was sacred and expressed an overarching divine plan. For Christians, the Old Testament and the New Testament rely on each other for understanding. The New Testament builds on and fulfills the Old Testament’s foundational themes.

Genesis contains two different cosmogonies, or stories of creation. The oldest is the second, found in Genesis 2:4b–11:9, in which man is created from dust, Adam and Eve sin and are expelled from the Garden of Eden, humanity multiplies beginning with Cain and Abel, and human wickedness prompts God to flood the Earth, saving only Noah and family. The first cosmogony, found in Genesis 1:1–2:4a, tells the six-day creation story. The second explains the human condition and God’s relationship with humanity using many anthropomorphisms. The first teaches that God is transcendent and perfect, and that humans have something of God’s holiness in their nature.

The rest of Genesis tells of the patriarchs of the Jewish people. God calls Abraham to migrate from Haran to Canaan, where he makes a covenant with him. Abraham’s son is Isaac, whose son is Jacob, who comes to be known as Israel. The people of Israel enter Egypt during a famine after Jacob’s son Joseph rises to a position of power there. God’s covenant with Abraham designates the Israelite people as uniquely belonging to God.

Exodus tells the story of Moses’s leadership of Israel and God’s miraculous intervention to lead the now enslaved Israelites out of Egypt to Mount Sinai. The people of Israel receive the Ten Commandments at Sinai and make a covenant of mutual loyalty with God. Israel journeys for forty years until they are led into the promised land of Canaan by Moses’s commander Joshua.

Judges recounts the Israelites’ conquest of Canaan and their organization as a loosely confederated people led by elders called shofets from the thirteenth to the eleventh centuries BCE. During this time, they undergo a cycle of unfaithfulness, suffering, repentance, and prosperity.

The Israelites desire a king, so God chooses Saul to lead them. After Saul’s failure to obey God’s commands, David of Bethlehem is anointed king. David’s reign was a golden age, although complicated. The capital city of Jerusalem was established, and David’s son Solomon builds a temple there. After Solomon’s death, Israel splits into a northern and southern kingdom, which are eventually invaded by Assyria and Persia, respectively. The time from the repatriation of Judah until the year 70 CE is known as the Second Temple Period.

The Prophets were God's spokespersons, and interpreted the signs of the time under God's inspiration. Some predicted the future, but most called Israel to a return to greater fidelity. Some prophets advised the king directly, while some challenged and opposed the king. The prophets were primarily concerned about authentic worship (freedom from idolatry) and social justice (advocacy for the poor and weak). Christians look to the prophets' sayings to interpret Jesus's role, message, and ministry as a messianic figure.

The course of Old Testament history shows a number of theological themes and developments with regards to ancient Israel. Priesthood and sacrifice were central to bridging the distance between God and humanity through sacred ritual. Initially, Israel, as its neighbors, was polytheistic, worshipping Yahweh but believing that other, lesser gods did exist. By the end of the Old Testament, Israel is firmly monotheistic. Likewise, a belief in a place of universal afterlife called Sheol developed into a belief in a last judgment and a final destiny in heaven or hell. The belief that God controls both good and evil only develops into a belief in supernatural evil very late in Old Testament history. Israel develops a self-identity as a spiritual guide for other peoples in God's plan for universal salvation.

True or False Questions:

1. The author claims that the creation accounts in Genesis are not historically true. True
2. The author claims that the creation accounts in Genesis are not true. False
3. *Genesis depicts two creation stories, the first one being the oldest in Jewish oral history. False
4. *After Adam and Eve left the Garden of Eden, human wickedness increased. True
5. For devout Jews to speak God's revealed name is the highest religious practice. False
6. *Most ancient covenants were actually much like business deals. False
7. Becoming a monarchy led to the cultural advancement of the people. True
8. *David's rule included a dysfunctional household. True
9. The most religiously devout king in Israel's history was Solomon. False
10. The single monarchy broke up quickly after Solomon's death. True
11. *Once the Jews were sent into exile, the Holy Land remained in foreign control for the next four hundred years. True
12. *Kings literally had guilds of prophets working for them. True
13. Not only did many ancient Jews believe in other gods, but there is good deal of the Old Testament that demonstrates the biblical authors did as well. True
14. *According to the author, most ancient Jews followed God's law not as much to get into heaven than to avoid going to hell. False
15. *Ancient Jews confused fallen angels with other gods. False

Essay/Discussion Questions:

1. In discussing the historicity of the Bible, the author cites two texts reporting the ascension of Jesus, one from the Gospel of Luke and the other from Acts of the Apostles, both of which were written by the same author. In the Gospel of Luke, Jesus ascends on Easter evening, and in Acts he ascends after forty days. The author claims that the biblical author intended to make theological points by depicting the ascension in two different ways. If this is the case, how do you think the reader of the Bible can trust any historical claim in the text?
2. *What do you make of the plagues in Exodus? What does this imply about God?
3. *The author says that Christians interpret Old Testament prophetic texts as foretelling the person and ministry of Jesus. He concedes that some of these texts may have intended historical persons at the time of the prophecy, but also that it is legitimate for Christians to see that the “fullness of these prophecies unfolds with Jesus.” Do you think this is a position that is intellectually defensible? Why or why not?

4. *What is most surprising to you in the history of ancient Israel and why?
5. The author says that Israel’s faith and the Bible which depicts that faith changed over time in key ways, such as belief in gods to belief in monotheism and the shift from embracing no appreciable afterlife to embracing the belief in heaven and hell. Do you think he makes a good case? If not, how would you interpret the texts he cited? If so, what does this imply about the revelatory quality of the Bible?

Chapter 3

Summary:

This chapter focuses on the person and ministry of Jesus in the New Testament. In the first century, Judaism was not a uniform whole, but was divided into different ideological groups with different religious emphases. Josephus describes three philosophical sects: the Pharisees, the Sadducees, and the Essenes.

The “Pharisees,” meaning “separated ones,” resisted hellenization and foreign influences. They accepted all three parts of the Tanakh as canon, believed in a last judgment, and anticipated a messiah, an anointed king who would establish a religious monarchy. Their emphasis was on the Law. The Sadducees were the most theologically conservative Jews of the day. They protested corruption in the Hasmonean priesthood and insisted that Jewish priests must come from the family line of Aaron. Their canon included only the five books of Torah, thus they typically did not anticipate a coming messiah. Their emphasis was on the temple and its rites. The Essenes also protested Hasmonean corruption, but withdrew from society to Qumran. They were an apocalyptic group that waited in the desert for God’s dramatic intervention to correct society. They embraced all three parts of the Tanakh and anticipated a messiah. Other groups included the Zealots, who opposed the Romans with armed conflict and staged insurrections which the Romans suppressed, and the Samaritans, who were a group of non-Israelite Jews formed after the northern kingdom was invaded by the Assyrian Empire.

Up to Jesus’s day and beyond, Jewish canon was highly disputed, other than the Torah. Likewise, establishing the Christian canon took some time. Texts were evaluated by the church in terms of apostolicity, antiquity, and orthodoxy. Different churches disagreed about the authority of certain texts; the full canon was not ratified until 397 by a synod of bishops in Carthage.

Gospel means “good news,” and was the title of Roman imperial texts and public declarations. Christians applied this term to the story of Jesus. The first three gospels, Matthew, Mark, and Luke, are called synoptic gospels because of their shared viewpoint. The gospels were written several generations after Jesus’s life, when it became clear to followers that he would not return within their lifetimes. Mark is the earliest gospel, written around 65 to 70. Matthew and Luke, written around the year 80, rely on Mark as well as another shared source (Q for German quelle, meaning “source”) that is now lost. John’s gospel shows church experience and developed theology, and was likely written around 90 to 100.

The historicity of the gospels is of a similar character to Old Testament texts discussed earlier. The gospel writers aimed to make use of symbolism, typography, and distinct theological aims to express the truth. The gospels are used as a reliable source of history about Jesus’s life, but a recent movement has cropped up to distinguish the “Jesus of history” from the “Christ of faith.” The gospels are fundamentally historical, but the reader must be aware of their nature as faith documents—they are written from decades-old oral history, from the perspective of faith, and for the purpose of faith.

Jesus was raised in Nazareth, in Galilee of northern Palestine. At about 30 CE, he is baptized by John “the Baptizer” and begins his own ministry preaching a new era of the “kingdom of God.” He gains followers and chooses an inner circle of twelve “apostles.” Jesus was a miracle worker and healer, and typically required faith in those he healed. He broke several taboos during his ministry and seemed scandalous to religious officials. He contradicted the Pharisees’ interpretations and commonly held beliefs about the Law, and spoke out against certain religious authorities. For these reasons, he made enemies among religious and political leaders. Some imagined him as an apocalyptic prophet of the last days, or a potential messiah or king, calling him “Son of David.” He preached inner holiness at times and revolution of the status quo at others. He spoke of the emerging kingdom with himself as the central figure, referring to himself as the “Son of Man.”

Jesus and his disciples entered Jerusalem during the Passover week. Jesus gathered his twelve closest disciples for the Passover supper, or Seder, and proclaimed a new covenant there. He identified his body with the unleavened bread, broke it, and had his disciples eat it. Likewise, he identified his blood with the cup and had each disciple share it. In doing this, he anticipated his death, which would be the sacrifice of atonement and of covenant ratification. Jesus is betrayed to the Sanhedrin by one of the twelve, Judas Iscariot. They presented him as a revolutionary to the Roman governor Pontius Pilate, who condemns him to death by crucifixion. Jesus died that Friday afternoon at three and is quickly buried in a nearby tomb. Sunday morning, women disciples found the tomb open and empty. That day, and on many occasions afterwards, the resurrected Jesus appeared periodically to the disciples.

Mark portrays Jesus as an urgent, even apocalyptic messenger of God. One regular theme and narrative device is the messianic secret; when Jesus's identity as messiah is discovered by someone, he silences them, but they proclaim it anyway. Jesus is opposed by both earthly authorities and supernatural evil. Jesus's ministry is one of self-offering, and he instructs his disciples to endure all trial to the end.

Matthew's gospel portrays Jesus and the personification of Israel and the new Moses through heavy reference to the Old Testament, beginning with a genealogy stretching back to Abraham. Matthew's gospel tells of Jesus's conception by Mary through the Holy Spirit and the persecution that drives Mary and Joseph to take refuge in Egypt before settling in Nazareth. Also included is the Sermon on the Mount, which resembles Moses on Sinai. Jesus preaches inner holiness but also the importance of works of righteousness.

Luke portrays Jesus as a universal savior, offering a genealogy of Jesus beginning with Adam and Eve. Luke's telling of Jesus's conception brings Joseph and Mary to Bethlehem by way of a census registration. God's salvation by reversal of fortunes is a major theme, especially the reversal of poverty. The wealthy and powerful are challenged to solidarity with the poor and weak.

John identifies Jesus with something like Old Testament Wisdom who existed with God before creation and through whom God created all things. The recognition of the person of Jesus as the face of God is a major theme in John. In one sense Jesus appears to only work for God, but in another sense, he seems to identify with God. The cross becomes the place where Jesus is most glorified, instead of a place of horror. Self-offering love among disciples is a second major theme.

The church concluded that all four gospels are true, even as they are different. Mark's gospel depicts a battle between a messiah and forces of social and supernatural evil. Matthew's is written for the converted Jewish community, with an emphasis on Jesus's fulfillment of Old Testament expectations. Luke's focuses on lowliness, humility, and God's presence among the poor. John's is a message of self-offering and wholehearted discipleship.

Essay/Discussion Questions:

1. *Do you think that the time and place in which he lived was conducive to Jesus's message? How so or why not?
2. Given that today we experience the Bible as a settled package, what is your reaction to the development of the canon?
3. *Does the plurality of interpretations of Jesus in the four gospels bring confusion to his message or fill it out? Explain.
4. *Is there a particular gospel that appeals more to you than others? What do you think this implies about your life?
5. Given Jesus's concentrating on the message of the kingdom of God, some scholars have posed the provocative thesis that Jesus went about preaching the kingdom of God and his followers changed the message to preaching about Jesus. What do you think about this position? Is there evidence in the New Testament to support it? Is there counter-evidence in the New Testament to challenge it?

Chapter 4

Summary:

The four gospels constitute roughly the first half of the New Testament. The remainder consists of: Acts of the Apostles, thirteen Pauline letters, Hebrews, James, two letters of Peter, three letters of John, and Revelation. These works show the newly formed church trying to make sense of what it means to be Christian, in terms of beliefs, ethics, authority, and church structure. The earliest believers did not think that Jesus had started a religion separate from Judaism. The new church would have to reconcile Jesus's messianic role as Son of God with their strict monotheism.

Acts of the Apostles depicts early preaching about Jesus. Peter gives its first recorded sermon, framing his present time as an apocalyptic one, identifying Jesus as Lord, and urging faith in him. The second sermon is by Stephen, who details Jesus's fulfillment of Old Testament salvation history before the Sanhedrin, including Saul, later known as the convert Paul. Stephen is stoned for his faith. Acts intends to be an accurate account of the early church, but also represents a theology written with a certain narrative license. The church is presented as idealized, with much smoother conflict and controversy than was really the case. The apostles in Jerusalem were filled with the Holy Spirit and continued Jesus's ministry despite persecution. Before long, Christian leaders began to spread out and establish the church in other places. A main issue the church deliberated was the requirements for a Gentile to become a member of the faith.

The conversion of Saul (Paul), who had previously been a powerful persecutor of Christians, is one of the most important events in the life of the early church. Paul encounters the risen Jesus on the road to Damascus, after which he is led, blinded, into the city where he is baptized. Paul was the early church's most prolific missionary, completing three long journeys focused on Turkey and Greece.

Judaizers were Christians who demanded Gentile converts must be circumcised and take on the full Torah. Paul and Barnabas disagreed, and the Council of Jerusalem was held to settle the controversy. It was decided that Gentile converts would only have to abide by basic morality and kosher laws regarding meat preparation, allowing the church to be more universal. But, controversy remained even after the decision.

Paul's letters to individuals or Christian communities make up about a quarter of the New Testament. These are occasional letters, not treatises, so their contents are often conditioned by the specific context or issue Paul is addressing. Pauline authorship has historically been disputed for a handful of these letters, for a variety of reasons. Paul's theology clearly reflects the kerygma, or earliest Christian message. Paul does not elaborate on Jesus's specific teachings, but focuses instead on who Jesus is, how Jesus saves, and how Christians should live. He draws on the Jewish Wisdom thought in figuring Jesus, as well as the theme of a pre-existent, anticipated messiah. Another theme is the activity of the Holy Spirit, which Paul somewhat distinguishes from the Father and the Son. The church would take centuries to fully develop Trinitarian theology.

Paul believed that to be saved, one had to be justified before God and understand that justification correctly as due to the sacrificial atonement of Jesus, for which the resurrection is key. There is a potential "clash of theologies"—Jesus seemed to preach the necessity of the Law, but Paul believes Jesus's cross and resurrection justifies and saves.

Paul's letter to the Galatians addresses a controversy there about whether Gentiles had to take on the Law. Paul reminds them of the Council of Jerusalem and draws on Jewish salvation history, arguing that the Mosaic Law was part of an intermediary, "disciplinary" covenant that Jesus fulfilled. For Paul, grace is a free gift of God, and the believer is justified and saved through grace by faith. He preaches inner renewal and life in the spirit, rendering the Law obsolete for both Gentiles and Jews. This is the theological start of a new religion. Ultimately, Paul was arrested for preaching in Rome, resulting in his eventual trial and martyrdom.
