44. What is the JCAHO and CARF and what do they do? What are some of the requirements that healthcare organizations must meet for accreditation from these organizations?

ANSWER: JCAHO is the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations and CARF is the Commission on Accreditation of Rehabilitation Facilities. It is a quality accreditation organization whose members subscribe to a standard-based review process. Compliance is demonstrated through on-site review by JCAHO reviewers. The Joint Commission and CARF have requirements for accreditation for a wide array of functions and performance areas. In addition to clinical requirements, requirements cover such areas as the human resources, information management, leadership, life safety, and others. Both accrediting organizations expect healthcare facilities to use a collaborative and multidisciplinary approach to improve performance, pursue quality initiatives, and develop staff competencies.
