72. What is the doctrine of stare decisis? In the American legal system, how is it applied, and what is its effect?

ANSWER: In a common law legal system, past judicial decisions are binding in current disputes with similar facts. This feature of the common law, which is the basis of the American legal system is unique, because unlike the law in other legal systems, it is judge-made law. Within the common law system, when possible, judges attempt to be consistent and to base their decisions on the principles suggested by earlier cases. The body of principles and doctrines that form the common law emerged over time as judges applied the principles announced in earlier cases to subsequent legal controversies. The practice of deciding cases with reference to former decisions, or precedents—the cornerstone of the American legal system—is called the doctrine of stare decisis. Under this doctrine, judges are obligated to follow the precedents established within their jurisdictions. This helps courts to be more efficient and makes the law more stable and predictable.

He asks if he can use his lunchtime to go to an empty office and pray. His employer refuses. Discuss all of the arguments Joe may use as well as what protections he may have.

ANSWER: The free exercise clause guarantees that people can hold any religious beliefs they want, or can have no religious beliefs. The constitutional guarantee of personal religious freedom restricts only the actions of the government, and not those of private businesses. The government must have a compelling state interest for restricting the free exercise of religion, and the restriction must be the only way to further that interest. To comply with the free exercise clause, a government action must not be a substantial burden on religious practices. A burden is substantial if it pressures individuals to modify their behavior and to violate their beliefs. When religious practices work against public policy and the public welfare, the government can act. For instance, the government can require that a child receive certain types of vaccinations or receive medical treatment when the child's life is in danger—regardless of the parent's religious beliefs.
