Essay (14)

Q70. [Essay]

Who was Kalief Browder and what legislative change resulted from his case?

Suggested answer: Sample response: Browder was a 16-year-old who was convicted of stealing a backpack and spent time in solitary confinement although he was never tried or convicted. He committed suicide. Then-President Obama signed an executive order banning solitary confinement of juveniles following his death.

Q71. [Essay]

Explain the two different means by which the probable cause determination is made

Suggested answer: Sample response: Probable cause can be determined by a preliminary hearing or a grand jury. Which is used depends on the jurisdiction.

Q72. [Essay]

How does the legislature use discretion and why is discretion needed?

Suggested answer: Sample response: The legislature chooses what issues are the most important and create laws that best reflect society's priorities. They cannot make laws outlawing all possible harmful behaviors, so they have to focus on the most important.

Q73. [Essay]

Describe how the initial appearance, preliminary hearing, and arraignment differ from each other.

Suggested answer: Sample response: At initial appearance, the defendant finds out the charges against them, gets an attorney, and decisions are made about bail. At the preliminary hearing, the judge or grand jury decides if there is enough evidence to charge the defendant. At arraignment, the defendant enters their plea.

Q74. [Essay]

Explain what happens when a person requests an appellate review.

Suggested answer: Sample response: A defendant requests a higher court review their trial to make sure that there were no errors at trial that had an adverse outcome on the defendant and that their constitutional rights were honored.

Q75. [Essay]

Explain the difference between probation and parole.

Suggested answer: Sample response: Probation is a sentence that allows a person to remain free in the community while under correctional supervision. Parole is for those who have served time in prison and are released to have the remainder of their sentence in the community.

Q76. [Essay]

Differentiate between a determinate sentence and an indeterminate sentence.

Suggested answer: Sample response: A determinate sentence is a fixed number of years in prison. An indeterminate sentence is a range of time that a person can serve, dependent on behavior in prison.

Q77. [Essay]

Discuss the parole process from the determination of eligibility until completion of sentence and what happens if the person commits a new crime.

Suggested answer: Sample response: Parole is the conditional release of someone before they have completed their full sentence. A parole board determines eligibility. If a person on parole commits a new crime, they can be returned to prison.

Q78. [Essay]

Why is ethical behavior such an important consideration in the criminal justice system?

Suggested answer: Sample response: Actors in the criminal justice system have a great deal of discretion doing their jobs, so they have the chance to abuse their power if they are not ethical.

Q79. [Essay]

What is meant by “the ends justify the means” when it comes to police officer misconduct?

Suggested answer: Sample response: According to the phrase, “the ends justify the means,” police officers can violate the rights of citizens to ensure that they get a conviction, and they believe that they have done the right thing because they have gotten a guilty person off the streets.

Q80. [Essay]

Discuss the importance of the discretion of judges in the criminal justice system.

Suggested answer: Sample response: Even with sentencing guidelines and mandatory minimums, judges often have some discretion in sentencing. They can examine mitigating and aggravating circumstances and decide the blameworthiness of people and adjust sentences accordingly.

Q81. [Essay]

Contrast the consensus theory of justice and the conflict theory of justice. What different assumptions does each theory make regarding human society? Which do you agree most with, and why?

Suggested answer: Sample response: The consensus theory is that most people share a common set of beliefs and agree on what is right and wrong. They can put aside their differences and come together to protect the community from those that they agree are dangerous. Laws are passed that reflect common values and the population as a whole can have values shift and change laws, but the majority of society agrees. The conflict theory argues that laws reflect the views of the most powerful. Laws are made so that marginalized groups are likely to be labeled criminal and those in power have their deviant behaviors classified as eccentric or charming. I agree with both perspectives. Many crimes like rape and murder are agreed upon by society and almost everyone agrees that they should be illegal. It is the more minor crimes or quality of life crimes that target the marginalized and excuse the behavior of those in power.

Q82. [Essay]

Contrast the original intent of the three-strikes laws in California with the law that was finally enacted and discuss the consequences of the law.

Suggested answer: Sample response: The three strikes law was passed after the murder of Polly Klass. The intention was to prevent people who repeatedly committed violent crimes from having another opportunity to hurt anyone else. Instead, all people convicted of felonies, including nonviolent offenses, could be sentenced to 25 years to life on a third conviction. People addicted to drugs may commit three felonies due to their addiction for crimes such as burglary or drug possession and end up in prison for years. These people do not pose a danger to society and are not the people the three strikes law was designed to target. As consequence of the three strikes law, prisons became seriously overcrowded with people who had committed nonviolent offenses. The three strikes law also was disproportionately used against Black people. The criminal justice system appeared unfairly harsh, cruel and unusual.

Q83. [Essay]

How does society balance crime control with due process? Is it better for some guilty people to go free or some innocent people to be wrongly convicted? Why?

Suggested answer: Sample response: Controlling crime is important because without any crime control, people will not be safe. In the U.S. we put great value on due process, so the general consensus is that it is better to have guilty people go free than an innocent person be convicted. A rush to judgement and cutting corners on due process have led to innocent people being convicted. While there are some people who do get off on technicalities, it is not common. Most people take pleas and are held accountable for their crimes. Even when people get new trials based on technicalities, this more often results in a new trial than someone just being let out completely free. In my opinion, it is better to have guilty go free than to have the innocent be convicted.

Essay (4)

Q97. [Essay]

Explain what is meant by, "The law is not static," and give an example.

Suggested answer: Sample response: Laws change with the times. For example, alcohol was outlawed during prohibition and then it was made legal again. There were two amendments to the Constitution to handle this change.

Q98. [Essay]

Provide an example of an ethical dilemma that players within the criminal justice system can face.

Suggested answer: Sample response: A police officer sees a fellow officer stealing a bracelet from a crime scene. The officer should report the other officer, but the code between officers is that they do not tell on each other.

Q99. [Essay]

What are some examples of aggravating and mitigating circumstances? Give an example of a time when each would apply.

Suggested answer: Sample response: Aggravating circumstances increase the blameworthiness of the person being charged. This could be doing something cruel such as extreme harm and lack of remorse. Mitigating circumstances decrease the blameworthiness of the defendant. Mitigating circumstances are things like being especially young. A case with aggravating circumstances would be murdering a child in front of the mother to make her suffer more. The cruelty for the sake of being cruel makes it especially heinous. A mitigating circumstance could be a child who had been abused killing their abusive parent. Although murder is an extreme response, it is more understandable how a child or teen could feel that there is no other way to stop the abuse and they have already suffered enough.

Q100. [Essay]

What is an example of a celebrated case and how did it and other celebrated cases lead to incorrect assumptions about crime and the criminal justice system?

Suggested answer: Sample response: The trial of Casey Anthony was a celebrated case. Like many celebrated cases, it led to the impression that guilty people get off if they have a good lawyer, the criminal justice system is not effective, and prosecutors cannot secure convictions even when everyone “knows” someone is guilty. Further impressions include that juries cannot be trusted to get decisions right and there are many guilty people who go free and are living in society. This and other celebrated cases also make it seem as though there are a lot of violent crimes and that most of the crime that occurs is violent.
