A feeling of physiological deprivation of the basic necessities of life, such as food, clothing, shelter, or safety is a need. Understanding and satisfying consumer needs and wants is fundamental to marketing success.

Marketing 5ce Edition by Grewal Ch01

21) B

The particular way in which a person chooses to satisfy the requirement for any of the basic necessities of life is a want. Marketing is about satisfying customer needs and wants.

22) E

Food and shelter are included in the definition of need. The basic necessities of life, such as food, clothing, shelter, or safety refer to needs.

23) E

A want is the particular way in which a person chooses to fulfill his or her need, which is shaped by the person's knowledge, culture, and personality. Understanding and satisfying consumer needs and wants is fundamental to marketing success.

24) B

This example illustrates different ways to satisfy a basic requirement of life and describes the concept of a want. The particular way in which a person chooses to satisfy the requirement for any of the basic necessities of life is a want.

25) C

The customer segment or group to whom a firm is interested in selling its products and services is the target market. A viable target market is those consumers who want and can afford such a product.

26) B

In this case, women constitute Smith's primary target market. Ideas include thoughts, opinions, philosophies, and intellectual concepts that can be marketed to target markets.

27) C

Marketing 5ce Edition by Grewal Ch01

The trade of things of value between the buyer and the seller so that each is better off as a result is referred to as an exchange. Sellers provide goods or services, then communicate and facilitate the delivery of their offering to consumers. Buyers complete the exchange by giving money and information to the seller.

28) B

The trade of things of value between the buyer and the seller so that each is better off as a result is referred to as an exchange. Sellers provide goods or services, then communicate and facilitate the delivery of their offering to consumers. Buyers complete the exchange by giving money and information to the seller.

29) B

The controllable set of activities that a firm uses to respond to the wants of its target markets is referred to as the marketing mix. Marketing traditionally has been divided into a set of four interrelated decisions known as the marketing mix, or four Ps: product, price, place, and promotion.

30) D

One main purpose of marketing is to create value by developing a variety of offerings, including goods, services, and ideas, to satisfy customer needs. The marketing mix is the controllable set of activities that a firm uses to respond to the wants of its target markets.

31) A

Goods refer to tangible customer benefits that are produced by people or machines and can be separated from the producer. Goods are items that can be physically touched.

32) B

Marketing 5ce Edition by Grewal Ch01

Services refer to the intangible customer benefits that are produced by people or machines and cannot be separated from the producer. Air travel, banking, insurance, beauty treatments, and entertainment all are services.

33) C

In this case, the live performance would be termed as a service. Services are intangible customer benefits that are produced by people or machines and cannot be separated from the producer.

34) B

Ideas include thoughts, opinions, philosophies, and intellectual concepts that can be marketed. Groups promoting bicycle safety go to schools, give talks, and sponsor bike helmet poster contests for the members of their primary target market: children.

35) D

The residential market constitutes the secondary target market. Ideas include thoughts, opinions, philosophies, and intellectual concepts that can be marketed to primary and secondary target markets.

36) B

The youth constitute the company's primary target market. Ideas include thoughts, opinions, philosophies, and intellectual concepts that can be marketed to primary and secondary target markets.

37) D

The term "price" refers to the overall sacrifice a consumer is willing to make in terms of money, time, and energy in order to acquire a specific product or service. Marketers must determine the price of a product carefully on the basis of the potential buyer's belief about its value.

39) D

The term "price" refers to the overall sacrifice a consumer is willing to make in terms of money, time, and energy in order to acquire a specific product or service.

41) E

The time and energy spent for the bike along with the sum of money constitutes the price. Price is everything the buyer gives up in exchange for the product.

42) C

For marketers, the key to determining prices is figuring out how much customers are willing to pay so that they are satisfied with the purchase, and the seller achieves a reasonable profit.

Firms become value driven by focusing on four activities. First, they gather vast quantities of information about their customers and competitors. Then they analyze and share it across their own organization and with other firms that might be involved in getting the product or service to the marketplace, such as manufacturers and transportation companies. Second, they strive to balance their customers' benefits and costs of their offerings for themselves, their customers, and society as a whole. Third, they concentrate on building relationships with customers. Fourth, they take advantage of new technologies and connect with their customers using the latest social and mobile media channels.

Marketing has had a significant impact on consumers as well. Without marketing, it would be difficult for any of consumers to learn about new products and services.

111) A

Expands global presence.

112) E

Marketers must learn what the needs and wants are consumers in order to properly market to them.

113) A

A firm that wishes to expand globally should ideally analyze new customers' needs and wants on a segment-by-segment, region-by-region basis. Without the knowledge that can be gained by analyzing new customers' needs and wants on a segment-by-segment, region-by-region basis—one of marketing's main tasks—it would be difficult for a firm to expand globally.

Inefficient use of customer data can mean that stock replenishment is made by estimation rather than by knowing true customer data. This results in: disconnected supply chain systems, limited collaboration, reduced information sharing, and supply variability leading to poor-quality information on which to base sales forecasts, production plans, and replenishment schemes.

118) D

Firms have come to realize that good corporate citizenship through socially responsible actions should be a priority because it will help their bottom line in the long run. In a world in which consumers constantly hear about negative examples of ethics, the need for companies to live up to their ethical promises becomes even more important.

119) E

Canadian companies recognize that a strong social orientation is in both their and their customers' best interest.

Key to the success of many entrepreneurs is that they launch ventures that aim to satisfy unfilled needs. Whereas marketing plays a major role in the success of large corporations, it also is at the centre of the successes of numerous new ventures initiated by entrepreneurs, or people who organize, operate, and assume the risk of a business venture.

121) D

Great and distinguished entrepreneurs have a vision of how certain combinations of products and services can satisfy unfilled needs. They find and understand a marketing opportunity (i.e., the unfilled need), conduct a thorough examination of the marketplace, and develop and communicate the value of their products and services to potential consumers.

122) D

The expansion of a firm's global presence is exemplified in this case. Without the knowledge that can be gained by analyzing new customers' needs and wants on a segment-by-segment, region-by-region basis—one of marketing's main tasks—it would be difficult for a firm to expand globally.

Marketing 5ce Edition by Grewal Ch01

126) Understanding and satisfying consumer needs and wants is fundamental to marketing success. A need is when a person feels deprived of the basic necessities of life, such as food, clothing, shelter, or safety. A want is the particular way in which the person chooses to fulfill his or her need, which is shaped by a person's knowledge, culture, and personality. For example, when we are hungry, we need something to eat. Some people want a submarine sandwich to satisfy that hunger, whereas others want a salad and some soup instead.

127) The marketing mix is the controllable set of activities that a firm uses to respond to the wants of its target markets. It includes the four Ps that are product, price, place, and promotion.

128) Goods are items that one can physically touch. Roots clothing, Molson Canadian beer, Kraft Dinner, and countless other products are examples of goods. Unlike goods, services are intangible customer benefits that are produced by people or machines and cannot be separated from the producer. Air travel, banking, insurance, beauty treatments, and entertainment all are services. Getting money from the bank by using an ATM or teller is another example of using a service.

129) The process in which businesses sell to consumers is known as B2C (business-to-consumer) marketing, whereas the process of selling merchandise or services from one business to another is called B2B (business-to-business) marketing. Some companies, such as GE (General Electric), are engaged in both B2B and B2C marketing at the same time.

130) Marketing also affects stakeholders, for example, supply chain partners such as wholesalers and retailers, or intermediaries such as transportation or warehousing companies. All of these entities market to one another. Manufacturers sell merchandise to retailers, but the retailers often have to convince manufacturers to sell to them.

Marketing 5ce Edition by Grewal Ch01

131) Product-oriented companies focus on developing and distributing innovative products with little concern about whether the products best satisfy customers' needs. Manufacturers believed that a good product would sell itself, and retail stores typically were considered places to hold the merchandise until a consumer wanted it. Companies with a product orientation generally start out by thinking about the product they want to build; they try selling the product after it is developed rather than starting with an understanding of the customers' needs and then developing a product to satisfy those needs.

132) Companies that adopt a sales orientation view marketing as a selling function. Therefore, the focus is to sell as much as possible rather than focus on offering services consumers really want. The main consideration for Alex, if he goes with sales orientation, is to use aggressive sales techniques such as hiring salespeople, intensive door to door sales, and making cold calls to sell the service. Such companies tend to focus on making a sale or on each transaction rather than building long-term customer relationships.

By focusing on sales rather than consumer needs, the company may miss opportunities. Furthermore, the company needs to find new customers all the time as profits come from sales volume rather than from repeat business from satisfied customers.

Marketing 5ce Edition by Grewal Ch01

133) Companies that have a sales orientation basically view marketing as a selling function where companies try to sell as many of their products as possible rather than focus on making products consumers really want. These firms typically depend on heavy doses of personal selling and advertising to attract new customers. Companies with a selling orientation tend to focus on making a sale or on each transaction rather than building long-term customer relationships. They generally believe that if consumers try their products, they will like them. Market-oriented companies start out by focusing on what consumers want and need before they design, make, or attempt to sell their products and services. They believe that customers have choice and make purchase decisions based on several factors, including quality, convenience, and price. Basically, the "customer is king," and the market is a buyer's market since consumers wield tremendous power. In this orientation, marketers' role is to understand and respond to the needs of consumers and to do everything possible to satisfy them.

134) Marketing firms recognized that there was more to good marketing than simply discovering and providing what consumers wanted and needed; to compete successfully, they would have to give their customers greater value than their competitors. Value reflects the relationship of benefits to costs, or what you get for what you give. In a marketing context, customers seek a fair return in goods and/or services for their hard-earned money and scarce time. They want products or services that meet their specific needs or wants and that are offered at a price that they believe is good value. Every value-based marketing firm must implement its strategy according to what its customers value.

Marketing 5ce Edition by Grewal Ch01

135) Information collected must be integrated across the company. The fashion designers for Zara, the Spain-based fashion retailer, for instance, collect purchase information and research customer trends to determine what their customers will want to wear in the next few weeks; simultaneously, the logisticians—those persons in charge of getting the merchandise to the stores—use the same purchase history to forecast sales and allocate appropriate merchandise to individual stores. Sharing and coordinating such information represents a critical success factor for any firm.

136) KEA does not have highly paid salespeople to sell its furniture. Its simple designs mean customers can easily choose a product and assemble it themselves. Further, there are few if (any) floor employees around to answer questions regarding the merchandise being displayed.

137) Firms that practice value-based marketing also use a process known as customer relationship management (CRM), a business philosophy and set of strategies, programs, and systems that focus on identifying and building loyalty among the firm's most valued customers. Firms that employ CRM systematically collect information about their customers' needs and then use that information to target their best customers with the products, services, and special promotions that appear most important to those customers. Building strong relationships with customers is important to creating value for an organization as it maximizes the long-term value of the buyer-seller relationship rather than trying to maximize the profit from each transaction.

Marketing 5ce Edition by Grewal Ch01

138) Marketers are steadily embracing new technologies, such as social and mobile media, to allow them to connect better with their customers and thereby serve their needs more effectively. Businesses take social and mobile media seriously, including these advanced tools in the development of their marketing strategies. Approximately three-quarters of North American companies now use social media tools for marketing purposes, and 46 percent of Internet users worldwide interact with social media on a daily basis. The explosive growth of mobile phones in India and China means that more than 77 percent of the world's population subscribes to mobile services. Beyond social media sites, online travel agencies have become the first place that users go to book travel arrangements. Several restaurant chains are exploiting location-based social media applications. The result of using social and mobile media for marketing is that users are driving the way brands and stores are interacting with social media.

139) Marketing advises production about how much of the company's product to make and then tells logistics when to ship it. It creates mutually valuable relationships between the company and the firms from which it buys. It identifies those elements that local customer's value and makes it possible for the firm to expand globally. Marketing has had a significant impact on consumers as well. Without marketing, it would be difficult for any of us to learn about new products and services.

140) Understanding customers is critical. Without the knowledge that can be gained by analyzing new customers' needs and wants on a segment-by-segment, region-by-region basis—one of marketing's main tasks—it would be difficult for a firm to expand globally.

141) Firms typically do not work in isolation. Manufacturers buy raw materials and components from suppliers, which they sell to retailers or other businesses after they have turned the materials into their products. Every time materials or products are bought or sold, they are transported to a different location, which sometimes requires that they be stored in a warehouse operated by yet another organization. The group of firms and set of techniques and approaches firms use to make and deliver a given set of goods and services is commonly referred to as a supply chain.

142) Student answers will vary. A marketing plan is a written document composed of an analysis of the current marketing situation, opportunities and threats for the firm, marketing objectives and strategy specified in terms of the four Ps, action programs, and projected or pro forma income (and other financial) statements. The following are some of the issues that might be addressed by the marketing plan:

- Funding
- Recruitment Geographic Range
- Image Building/Promotion of the Institution
- Website/E-recruiting
- Target Audiences
- Promotion of Academic Programs
- Scholarship Development
- Internal Communication
- Internal Marketing
- TV and Radio
- Media Relations

143) Marketing is about an exchange; the trade of things of value between the buyer and the seller so that each is better off as a result. When a customer donate blood, she is giving up her time and blood in an exchange for a "good feeling". In other words, she is buying "good feeling" in an exchange for her blood and time. After the exchange, customer is at a better state; feeling better, and Canadian Blood Services is at a better state; obtain more blood units to distribute to hospitals.

144) Marketing traditionally has been divided into a set of four interrelated decisions known as the marketing mix, or four Ps: product, price, place, and promotion. Together, the four Ps comprise the marketing mix, which is the controllable set of activities that a firm uses to respond to the wants of its target markets. The fundamental purpose of marketing is to create value by developing a variety of offerings, including goods, services, and ideas, to satisfy customer needs. Everything has a price, though it does not always have to be monetary. Price, therefore, is everything the buyer gives up—money, time, energy—in exchange for the product. Marketers must determine the price of a product carefully on the basis of the potential buyer's belief about its value. The third P, place, describes all the activities necessary to get the product from the manufacturer or producer to the right customer when that customer wants it. Promotion is communication by a marketer that informs, persuades, and reminds potential buyers about a product or service to influence their opinions or elicit a response.

Marketing 5ce Edition by Grewal Ch01

145) In a value-based, market-oriented firm, marketers share information about customers and competitors that has been collected through customer relationship management and integrate it across the firm's various departments. The fashion designers for Zara, the Spain-based fashion retailer, for instance, collect purchase information and research customer trends to determine what their customers will want to wear in the next few weeks; simultaneously, the logisticians—those persons in charge of getting the merchandise to the stores—use the same purchase history to forecast sales and allocate appropriate merchandise to individual stores. Sharing and coordinating such information represents a critical success factor for any firm. Imagine what might happen if Zara's advertising department were to plan a special promotion but not share its sales projections with those people in charge of creating the merchandise or getting it to stores.

146) Student answers will vary. They might suggest having a Facebook page where people can post their preferences regarding the menu or post suggestions. The page could feature discussions about the different choices offered by the restaurant. Student might also suggest using a Twitter account to allow people to share their experiences in the restaurants. The restaurants would benefit from the insights provided by the customers. YouTube can also be used to upload videos with demonstrations, celebrities endorsing the product, and so on.

The group of firms and set of techniques and approaches firms use to make and deliver a given set of goods and services is commonly referred to as a supply chain. Excellent supply chains effectively and efficiently integrate their supply chain partners—suppliers, manufacturers, warehouses, stores, and transportation intermediaries—to produce and distribute goods in the right quantities, to the right locations, and at the right time. Consider Loblaw, Canada's largest food distributor, and its relationships with its manufacturers and trading partners. A few years ago, Loblaw's supply chain system suffered from several inefficiencies that drove up its costs substantially. For example, inaccurate demand forecasts led trading partners to stock huge inventory to meet unpredictable demand. Inefficient use of customer data meant that stock replenishment was made by estimation rather than true customer data. Disconnected supply chain systems, limited collaboration, reduced information sharing, and supply variability led to poor quality information on which to base sales forecasts, production plans, and replenishment schemes. The company has since made many changes to improve the efficiency of its supply chain. Loblaw's participation in a radio frequency identification (RFID) pilot project for the grocery industry conducted by the Canadian RFID Centre has helped it improve its operations. Preliminary results seem to indicate that Loblaw has improved its inventory management and use of promotions.

148) Students' example will vary. Many Canadian corporations have recognized the importance of being a good corporate citizen. Strong social orientation is known to be in both corporations and their customers' best interests. Customers and investors trust companies with high levels of corporate responsibility and this will help corporations' bottom line in the long run. Therefore, corporations are likely to adopt corporate social responsibility programs which enrich society.
