ESSAY

69 : List and describe at least three actors in the sentencing process.

Correct Answer : The sentencing process rests in the hands of a number of actors. They include the prosecutor, the judge, and the probation staff. The prosecutor is an appointed or elected official who is responsible for bringing the state's case against the accused. In recent years, prosecutors have gained greater leverage to extract guilty pleas from defendants and, as a result, reduce the number of cases that go to trial. New laws have resulted in prosecutors having more power in the courtroom. This in turn has resulted in a transfer of power from judges to prosecutors, which has undercut the formal court process with a more informal system. Judges ultimately decide the sentence and judges typically choose the type of sentence, its length, and in the case of probation, the conditions under which it may be revoked. Before sentencing takes place, it is common for the court's probation staff to conduct a presentence investigation report. This contains information about the defendant's background, prior criminal record, education, previous employment, and family. The presentence investigation serves as the basis for sentencing and has a significant influence on whether the convicted defendant will get community release or secure confinement.

70 : Discuss consecutive and concurrent sentences and give an example of each

Correct Answer : Often times, someone is convicted of two or more charges. There must be a decision made to sentence the offender with concurrent or consecutive sentences. Concurrent sentences are one or more sentences imposed at the same time and served simultaneously. Consecutive sentences are one or more sentences imposed at the same time and served one after the other. If an offender is convicted of rape and possession of a handgun, and can be sentenced to 10 years for the rape and 3 years for the possession of a handgun, he or she will serve 10 years if the sentences are concurrent but will serve 13 years if the sentences are served consecutively.

71 : Discuss good time and how it can affect an offenders sentence.

Correct Answer : The amount of time spent in confinement can be reduced by time off for good behavior. Good time was first used in 1817 and is still found in many jurisdictions, but not all. Some offenders can also earn sentence reductions by participating in educational and vocational programs. The amount of time off one's sentence varies by jurisdiction. An advantage of good time is that prisoners can calculate their release date by subtracting the anticipated good time from their sentence. If prisoners become involved in disciplinary offenses or attempt to escape, they can lose their good time.

72 : How does judicial discretion affect the models of determinate and indeterminate sentencing?

Correct Answer : Judges exert a great deal of discretion in sentencing offenders. Society expects sentences to be appropriate to the seriousness of the criminal act and to incarcerate violent offenders and prevent innocent people from becoming victims of crime. The determinate sentence imposes a sentence for a definite term. Judges have less discretion in this type of sentence. The indeterminate sentence frequently causes sentence disparity. It allows judges little discretion because parole boards decide when to release an individual.

73 : Discuss the various types of structured sentences.

Correct Answer : In states that use determinate sentences, there has been an attempt to develop methods to structure and control the sentencing process and make it more rational. Sentencing guidelines were implemented by many states and the federal government. Guidelines give judges a recommended sentence based on the seriousness of a crime and the background of an offender. Some states use presumptive sentencing guidelines, which is a form of sentencing in which the legislature sets the penalties for criminal acts. Some states have rejected guidelines altogether because they perceive them as an improper interference with the role of the judiciary.

74 : Explain two major Supreme Court cases that impacted the legality of the application of sentencing guidelines in the U.S. Next, discuss some of the major criticisms of sentencing guidelines on the federal level?

Correct Answer : Two recent Supreme Court cases have placed a moratorium on the use of presumptive guidelines. In Blakely v. Washington, the court found that the sentencing guidelines in Washington state violated a defendant's Sixth Amendment rights because they permitted a judge to consider aggravating factors that would increase the sentence. In United States v. Booker, the Court ruled on whether the federal sentencing guidelines were unconstitutional and whether they violate the Sixth Amendment right to trial by jury. The court found that a sentence cannot be increased based on facts that were found by a judge and were not found by a jury or admitted by a defendant. The Court did not strike down the guidelines but ruled they could not be regarded as mandatory. Criticisms include complexity and difficulty of use, limits on the exercise of judicial discretion, harshness, a basis on prior record and offense elements rather than conviction charges, shifts of sentencing authority from judges to prosecutors, dissimilarity to the prior system, ethical considerations being ignored, biases against minorities, longer prison terms, and no consideration of mitigating circumstances.

75 : What are mandatory minimum sentences, and what affect have they had on correctional populations?

Correct Answer : Mandatory minimum sentences were another attempt to limit judicial discretion while getting tough on crime. This type of sentence specifies a certain required number of years of incarceration for specific crimes. The goal is to provide equal treatment for all offenders who commit the same crime, regardless of sex, age, race/ethnicity, or other personal characteristics. Mandatory minimums are when the legislature prohibits defendants convicted of certain violent crimes, drug offenses, or other crimes from being placed on probation. Also, the legislature may require that certain offenses, such as drug and/or gun possession, carry a mandatory term of imprisonment. Mandatory sentences have increased the size of prison populations to record levels.

76 : What are truth-in-sentencing laws, and why were they enacted?

Correct Answer : Truth-in-sentencing laws require offenders to serve a substantial portion of their sentence. They were enacted to reduce the discrepancy between the sentence imposed and the actual time served in prison. The U.S. Congress authorized funding for additional state prisons and jails. As incentive, states received monetary grants if they met truth-in-sentencing requirements where offenders served at least 85 % of their sentence. Under truth-in-sentencing legislation, parole eligibility and good time credits are greatly restricted or eliminated.

77 : How do each of the following affect sentencing: social class, gender, age, victim characteristics? Discuss fully.

Correct Answer : Social class—lower class individuals get longer terms, lack of a really good attorney. Gender—women receive less punitive sentences, especially those with children. Age—older individuals are treated with more lenience; younger individuals receive more punitive sentences. Victim characteristics—victim impact statements are given much consideration because they include the experiences and ordeals of the crime.
